Tips for Student Transition Back to School

Helping to create a smooth transition for your child from summer break to back to school can be difficult, especially during the trying times we are currently experiencing.

- Good Nights Equal Better Days: Begin moving into a school routine gradually, starting now. Begin this by starting to move bedtime up by 30 minutes. Develop a structured and calm bedtime routine.
- Implement Organization: Organization leads to less stress. Develop folders where finished playing with them.

- Create and Maintain a Daily Routine:

Routines should start from the time your child wakes up in the morning. Complete the routine with your child until they are able to successfully complete it independently.

- Utilize a picture schedule
- Set alarms to signify a change
- Empower and give the opportunity to regain a sense of control for teens. Allow them to create their own schedule and provide insight on different tips and tricks you utilize.

DAILY SCHEDULE

- Create a Separate Study Area: Work with your child to determine the appropriate area to complete their classwork. This area should be in a quiet location. All school materials should remain there even once the school day ends. This will help your child understand there is a time for work and a time for play.
- Create Opportunities to Demonstrate Self-Control: Students become frustrated and overwhelmed during the day. Create opportunities for your child to identify these feelings and productive ways to manage them.
 - Create relaxation or break boxes for your child to utilize. These can include but are not limited to fidget tools, calming bottles, stress balls, worry eaters, journals.
 - Break up the tasks that need to be completed.

important information/paperwork is kept. Utilize a color-coded calendar to track important tasks/activities. Create a clean and quiet space for homework completion.

- Ease your child's anxiety: Talk about your child's feelings. Remain positive as you communicate with your child, even if you have your own anxieties. Communicate with your child about things that are changing and things that are remaining the same about the school year.

- Practice and Model Self-Compassion: Show your child that given the circumstances, you are doing your best and that is what matters. Use this time to practice and model self-regulation strategies; taking deep breaths, using self-calming talk ("I am feeling overwhelmed, I need to take a break.").
- Set Aside Structured Time for Homework: Create space on a desk or table to work; help clean out their backpack; review the day's assignments; and discuss the homework as well as any questions about it. You can observe your child's learning behaviors while also reinforcing good study habits.

- Settling In: Be present in your child's learning as much as possible. If you are on a break from work while your child is engaged in synchronous learning, participate in the lesson alongside them.
- Open-Ended Questions: Engage in conversations with your child about their day. Ask your child open-ended questions
